UNO Faculty Oppose 413

by Craig Perkins
News Editor

"Pretty disastrous," said Shelton Hendricks, president of the UNO faculty senate, referring to the potential effect of proposed lid amendment 413 on the University of Nebraska.

"The proposed amendment does a number of things on paper, some on purpose and some inadvertent which would be very harmful," Hendricks said.

"No matter how wealthy we become as a state or society in the future the public sector will not be able to share in that wealth," Hendricks said.

According to a study by the University of Nebraska

- The state spent $2.229 billion in fiscal year 1998-99.

- The state will have $2.191 billion available in FY 1999-00 under the lid.

- The state must fund Medicaid and special education growth of about $33 million in FY 1999-00.

- The gap between revenue and funding needs, equals approximately $71 million.

- The Legislative Fiscal Office projects the university's "fair share" of the necessary budget cut to be about $20 million

"Over the next two years the total University of Nebraska request is $30 million," said Jim Buck, vice-chancellor for university affairs and communication. "If your budget is being cut by $20 million then what is the likelihood that your request will be funded?" Buck asked.

"When you have to limit state spending," Hendricks said, "there are only certain areas where the state has any flexibility."

Hendricks said there isn't much flexibility with police, prisons or Medicare. That education is one of the areas the state is free to cut.

Hendricks said the amendment proposal, as written, is about 3500 words and will add immensely to the state constitution and is seen by some as an attack on democracy.

Hendricks said one reason why the proposal has been able to get so far is some people were able to put about "$3 million towards a very simple message that will deal with an incredibly complex change in the way we govern ourselves"

KVNO Surpasses Fall Fund-Raising Goal

by Jessie Calvert
Staff Writer

KVNO Radio "Classical 90.7" recently raised $50,494 during an on-air membership drive. The goal was $50,000 but the station surpassed that amount by $494.

According to Debra Aliano, general manager of the station, "we knew our goal but we reached it faster than ever before. Once we reached our goal we stop. We announced on the station that we had reached $50,000 but a few more pledges came in after that."

The fall membership drive started on Oct. 12 and ended Oct. 20. "Our volunteers worked from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m. on weekdays, 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday, and 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Sunday. We had approximately 80 phone volunteers total," Aliano said.

A total of 295 new members pledged their support for the station and 269 members renewed their membership pledges. The average pledge was $83. "Over 40 percent of the money comes from membership contributions. Over 50 percent of the money comes from community involvement. This would be individual and business contributions. Businesses pay for announcements and they give grants for programming," Aliano said.

Along with the phone volunteers, area restaurants, food companies and grocery stores contributed meals for those volunteers. Fifteen area businesses also contributed funds, $3,535.

"The $50,000 will be used for general operating costs associated with running KVNO," Aliano said. These include running the station daily and providing new music for the listeners.

KVNO appeals to listeners who like classical music. It also features some jazz and specialty programming on the weekends. KVNO is licensed to UNO.

Many students wouldn't even remember when the first song was played on the KVNO airwaves.

"Our 25th anniversary was a year ago in August. We have been operating for a little over 26 years, since 1972," Aliano said.

"We have a lot of people from campus that come help us out. There is great campus support for KVNO," Aliano said. This includes both faculty and students that pledge their time to KVNO.

If anyone wishes to pledge money before KVNO's spring membership drive in March, they can contact the KVNO membership department at 559-5866 and ask for Joyce Fitch or Kay Denny.

UNO Professor To Teach In Ukraine

by Craig Perkins
News Editor

James Dick, professor of teacher education, will present seminars in Ukraine Nov. 1-6, designed to teach economics and creative methods of teaching economics.

Students and teachers will attend the seminars that employ creative and interactive teaching techniques.

Dick went to Ukraine previously as part of a team of economic and education professors.

"At those seminars," Dick said, "we taught basic economic concepts and demonstrated new teaching materials and strategies."

One purpose of the trip is "to help countries such as Ukraine during their period of economic transition in moving from a command economic system to a market economic system.

"My going over there will also be a way of determining how successful we were before," Dick said.

While in Ukraine, Dick will work with Robert Pustoviwt, economics professor at Cherkassy State University, and Victor Chuzhikov, economics professor at the Cherkassy Engineering and Technology Institute.

The seminars are partially funded by the UNO Office of International Studies and Programs through a US WEST grant. Additional funds are provided by the National Council on Economic Education's Economics International Program through a grant from the United States Department of Education. Other support is being provided by the Ukrainian Council on Economic Education.

Tobacco Tales: UNO Talks About Smoking

by Colleen Sergeant
Medical Writer

This is part of the Gateway's "Fight the Urge" series. The following comments and experiences of UNO students and staff show how everyone battles tobacco.

Heather Lubeley, a junior business major, blames smoking for the loss of her grandfather to cancer on Oct. 11. He suffered for seven months, as a cancerous tumor in his lung spread to his brain, stomach and bone marrow.

"He went from a fairly healthy 68 year old to a ghostly white shell in a hospital bed," she said.

Two weeks ago, Lubeley vowed she would never smoke another cigarette. Smoking on occasion with friends is not worth going through very long and painful lung cancer treatments, she said. "I just want people to think about that before they light up again."

Malcolm Wallace, a university staff member who has smoked for 13 years, said he was not prepared to be smoke-free, after his cigarettes and lighter were taken away before going to military basic training. "It's tough," he said. "I was climbing walls. I felt antsy, agitated and had trouble sleeping."

This was not Wallace's only discomfort.

"I was running a two mile test and I suddenly became light-headed and was gasping for air. The next thing I remember was waking up in the helicopter on the way to the emergency room. They thought I was having a heart attack, although, it turned out to be a respiratory attack."

One month and 18 days later, Wallace was discharged from the US army for having smoker's asthma. "If I hadn't been smoking I would still be in the army," he said. "So smoking ruined my military career."

Adam Marc, freshman UNMC medical student, just finished cadaver lab. Marc said he could see everything in the body really clear, including the tumors in the fibrous tissue of the lung. Marc doesn't know of anyone who smokes in his class, but wonders who would want to after viewing a black lung.

Ben Titus, a UNO football player, is certain smoking caused his mother's battle with breast cancer. "My mom ended up with breast cancer because she smoked for 20 years. In fact, she started smoking here at UNO," he said.

"Smoking looks like the thing to do here at UNO, which is really kind of sad," he said. "The peer pressure is really there."

Women: submitting to this pressure is a real turn-off to Titus. "I just think it's so unattractive to see women smoking on campus. Do they really need to be doing that right after and before class?"

Corey Brandert, UNO junior business management major, quit smoking cold turkey three years ago because smoking the night away at the bars got too expensive. "Now I can't hardly stand it; it just drives me crazy. I never realized that my clothes and apartment smelled like that, and I just find it disgusting now."

For Brandert, it was never an addiction. "I just had it in my hands so I had something to do."

Despite what the doctor says, William Allen, a UNO staff member who has smoked since the age of 13 and is about to turn 40, continues to smoke about two packs a day. "I have bronchitis and high blood pressure because of smoking," he said. "I tried to quit, one time for like a day, and couldn't do it."

Asthma complications forced Angela McDaniel, sophomore music performance major, to quit smoking.

Chewing a lot of gum has helped McDaniel break the habit and now she has fewer asthma attacks.

"I can run now without being out of breath and my breathing is better," McDaniel said. "I think it's OK for people to smoke, if they want cancer."

Youth is not a shield from the devastation tobacco can impose on your life.

Don't let tobacco knock you down; take control of your life and bust the addiction. Look for Round 1: "Pysching Yourself Up To Quit" in next Tuesday's issue.

If you have questions or would like to share a personal experience please drop by the Gateway or call 554-2470. Check out the information about smoking at the Gateway office in the Milo Bail Student Center.

Voter Apathy, Kiss My Foot

Lambda Chi Alpha Has Maverick Spirit

Dear Editor,

UNO 15 - Northern Colorado 13. The score says it all. Unfortunately, Cat Eldridge only told part of the story.

She wrote of the lack of student support and lack of crowd noise at this game.

She is correct in saying there needs to be more student support, but she is incorrect about the fans that were there.

I am a proud member of Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity and we are known as the Cannon Crew at home football games. We have attended every home game in the past three years. Through these years we have seen many great games, and I have never seen UNO's fans as they were in the fourth quarter, especially the student contingent in the south end zone.

Our chapter is a proud and

"Down Kitty": Don't Criticize Student Involvement

Dear Editor,

A recent article in The Gateway took me by surprise. I opened last Friday's paper to find Cat fighting the 'good fight' and lashing out at student apathy. Even though I agree with some of the ideas presented in Miss Eldridge's tirade, the views expressed toward certain areas of student involvement were inappropriate.

Chi Omega was unduly criticized in the editorial. They hold thirteen seats in this year's Student Senate. To me, this is not apathy but a true campus activism, concern for UNO and a dedication to their fellow students, both Greek and independent.

enthusiastic supporter of UNO's athletic teams. We were joined by members of three, not just one, other chapters on Saturday.

It is clear that Miss Eldridge attended the game to look for things to complain about, and not to show spirit for the team. Those of us who did cheer from the opening kickoff to the final gun had a tremendous amount of fun.

Miss Eldridge, please stay out of the south end zone if UNO plays St. Cloud State in the conference championship, so the die hard fans can do the shouting.

Sincerely,

Kent Cisar
Cannon Crew Chairman
Lambda Chi Alpha Fraternity

I too rallied my friends and harassed innocent bystanders with paraphernalia in the hopes of being elected. Why criticize the homecoming candidates when Student Government candidates do the exact same thing?

So, as one of my colleagues says, "Cat, retract those claws and stop barking up the wrong tree."

Sincerely,

Jon Shrader
Student President/Regent Elect

Columnist Formed "Lynch Mob With Words"

Dear Editor,

With all due respect, I don't think Mr. Croucher's call-to-arms to purge the dissidents from the party faithful at UNO—and eliminate us—will work. It's been done before: in Nazi Germany, Communist China and the Soviet Union. Wasn't very popular. Here, in America, we have something called a constitution. It guarantees, among other things, the right to free speech without fear of reprisal.

Croucher totally side-stepped the main point of my E-mail, took one phrase out of context and went on the attack. The issue of part-and full-timer equity is a perennial sore at universities nationwide, and yes—even here at UNO.

Since I inadvertently sent that private E-mail out campus-wide recently, I've received many letters of support and encouragement, some from tenured faculty.

If Croucher doesn't think I should teach, then he hasn't read my student evaluations over the years. I'd mate them with anyone's here—bare none.

In a democracy, journalism has a nobler purpose than forming lynch mobs with paragraphs and nooses from words.

Sincerely,

William C. Pugh
Full-time instructor
Management/Marketing Dept.

Voter apathy is a major problem. Duh!

This is not new news to many Americans. For countless years we have been bombarded with statistics on turnout, ways to increase turnout and the reasons for low turnout. I'm tired of reading and hearing about it all. Stop the insanity.

But low and behold, when I open up the Oct. 26 issue of the Omaha World Herald, what do I find? I find an article about voter apathy.

At first, the article didn't really bother me. Then I read about one of the suggestions made by the person being interviewed, a political science professor at UNO. She said, "I guess we could do something like fine people for not voting. But that would bring up its own evils."

No kidding.

People in this country have the right to and not to vote. Take my father for example. Nixon was the last person he voted for, the reason? No politician or referendums since then have appealed or disgusted him, so why should he vote for someone or something he doesn't like or dislike? He shouldn't be forced to vote.

All we need is the government controlling voting even more than it already does. How in the world would we be able to or be constitutionally allowed to fine people for not voting? It's absolutely improbable and ridiculous.

Even further, why should he vote for or against a referendum that nobody really understands?

Take 413 for example, what's up with that? One side tells you one thing, while another side tells you the exact opposite. Faculty at UNO and at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln are ferociously opposing it. Many other people support it and deny the charges made by its opponents.

What will its effects truly be, are opponents using scare tactics? I don't know, so what decision should I make? I'm really not sure, maybe I won't vote either way on the matter, and that's my right as an American citizen.

If you have an opinion, voice it. If you like a politician, vote for that person. However, if you don't like anybody who's running for office, or don't care about new legislation being proposed, don't vote. It's your right.

Gateway Music Review

by Brian Grummert
Staff Writer

The Good
Local H's new Pack Up the Cats is so perfectly put together, even I like it. Not being a guitar rock lover is not necessary for the tightly written, pin-pointedly executed CD that has more energy than a lot of electronica.

"Lucky," for instance, utilizes animal voices better than anything since The Chipmunks' Christmas Album. Even something as uninspired as "All-Right (Oh, Yeah)" is fun.

Lyrics throughout the album (with the exception of "All-Right") are great. "Chal! Said the Kitty" and "Lucky" stand out a bit more than the rest.

I also liked the sense of humor — track four is titled "Hit the Skids Or: How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Rock." The song title describes the quality of the album.

The Bad

My initial reaction to listening to Ruth Ruth Are You My Friend Yet was that it was great and I was sure I had heard it somewhere before. Then I came to the realization that it was previously sung, better, by Matthew Sweet.

Lack of originality is something I can't stand, and it's the best part of the album. The songs that aren't at least partial knock offs have no idea where to go, or what to say.

Occasionally, the songs will actually start to reach a point that's interesting and different, but a few seconds later, it will go off on a tangent that is known as the song. Purchase only if you have an overwhelming desire not to have any depth in your life.

The Averages
House of Large Sizes, Glass Cockpit; Varnaline, Sweet Life and Mudhoney's Tomorrow Hit Today aren't by any means bad. At times they can have a small touch of greatness, but there is a persistent mediocrity that plagues the three albums.

Glass Cockpit is probably the best. The album features cool, but not incredibly aesthetic lyrics. The natural noise and sound bites from daily television and radio stations nicely kick off a lot of their songs.

Unfortunately, and I'm not exactly sure why, it works better when Local H does it. It doesn't feel tacked on in House of Large Sizes' album, but it leaves the openings behind whereas it still seems present with H.

"Cranko-American" still works and is one of the better songs on the album. Like Ruth Ruth, but nowhere near to the same degree, a stronger focus would've helped out with a few of the songs.

Tomorrow Hit Today's main problem is that it isn't as intense as it's first track, "A Thousand Forms of Mind."

I don't want to sound like the growing legion of critics that say Rock & Roll is dead, but some of this album just sounds like a lot of yelling with an accompanying guitar. Oh, just wait until they get louder! Angrier! Less coherent!

This includes "Oblivion" which sounds like a bad Metallica song that I think is suppose to feel disturbing.

Mudhoney is a group that you wonder why is still around after Seattle's music scene was sucked into a big, gaping hole. The album almost has the feeling of "why bother." That's the general desire you'll have for listening to it.

Sweet Life is somewhere in-between subtle and uninteresting which means it's almost always going to be boring.

Even when Varnaline gives their songs stronger guitar and drums, like in "Now You're Dirt," it still falls flat.

Gateway Movie Review

"Pleasantville"

by Brian Grummert
Staff Writer

Pleasantville (New Line Cinema, PG-13) is not the mass appeal, feel-good film that was expected this fall. It's something better.

Written, directed and produced by Gary Ross, the talented scribe behind two other displacement fantasies (Dave and Big), Pleasantville is a complicatedly brilliant allegory with the best film score in years from Randy Newman, and beautiful photography utilizing computer generated images for more than blowing up buildings.

The film is about twin teenagers, David (Tobey Maguire) and Jennifer (Reese Witherspoon) who, when visited by a God-like TV repairman (Don Knotts), are immediately sucked into David's favorite '50s sitcom, appropriately named after the Jersey town that publishes Reader's Digest.

The film starts out being not much more than a situational comedy. The Stepford Wives looks that Joan Allen and William H. Macy (who play the parents) give are great in the backdrop of Witherspoon's sharp lines. Maguire's frantic desire to keep things exactly as they were sets up the movie both for the allegory undertones and the inevitable plot — Witherspoon's tampering will not leave this town as it was.

When the residents begin to exert desires, thoughts and efforts of will, they, or at least the things around them, turn color. A deflowered basketball player sees a red flower after dropping Jennifer off at her picture-perfect house. Allen discovers her sexuality on her own and literally blushes to shades of peach. The film is full of other thick visual metaphors such as an apple given to David from his girlfriend (like in Eden) and a shot of exhilaration from falling rain (like Shawshank Redemption).

And that is when this subtly constructed allegory takes shape. Unlike The Truman Show, which could mean only a few things intended by the viewer, not fully created by the artists, Pleasantville gives more than a dozen different possibilities as to what it's about.

Traditional allegories like Animal Farm and, ironically, The Wizard of Oz, don't give easy to understand messages. Neither are like Gulliver's Travels, which has one main theme (that people suck) and an explanation in case you didn't understand what idea was being thrown at you through an absurd story.

That's the interesting thing about the better allegory writing utilized in this film. It seems to encompass an artist's entire psychology because their messages are as complicated as life. There are no easy answers in these works; there are multiple things that a viewer can get out of it.

There are so many possibilities and meanings in Pleasantville. If it ever seems conflicting, it's just trying to say more than it is, as many critics have noted, a critique of the '50s.

If it is a critique of the '50s, then it could also be an explanation as to what happened during that time period. Or, it could be a critique of conservatism.

From a philosophical point of view, it could be a description of the repercussions of free will or the determinants of perfectionism.

There is also blatant race-relations commentary (an entire shot is lifted from To Kill a Mockingbird).

Mavs now stand at 0-4-0 after weekend

The Maverick hockey team is back at square one. Again.

The team is still searching for its first win of the year and they hope to get it this weekend against Minnesota State-Mankato tonight or tomorrow in the Civic Auditorium. The puck drops at 7:35 p.m. both nights.

The Mavericks of Nebraska-Omaha stands at 0-4-0 after being swept by Denver University last weekend while the Mavericks of Minnesota State are 5-0-0 after sweeping Alaska-Anchorage, Canisius and beating Brandon University (Ontario) to open the season. History goes with Nebraska-Omaha as they won the season series from Minnesota State 2-1-1 last year. Nebraska-Omaha won twice in Minnesota but Minnesota State tied and won in overtime in Omaha at the end of last season.

"Our guys have been working hard," assistant hockey coach Steve Rohlik said, "we've got to get hungry."

Nebraska-Omaha has not been finding the net in its first four games. The team has four goals on 109 shots but two of them have come on the power play. The four goals have been scored by four different players (Kyle O'Keefe, Joe Yurecko, Jason White and Tom Kowal). Nebraska-Omaha has yet to score in the first period this year. Nebraska-Omaha has also been penalized 33 times in the first four games and killed off 20 of 24 power plays against them.

"We've got to throw the puck on the net," Rohlik said.

The Nebraska-Omaha goal tenders have played solid games despite their statistics not agreeing with that. Jason Mitchell and Kendall Sidoruk have split time between the pipes and have nearly equal numbers.

Both are 0-2-0 on the year, have a save percentage around .870 and have made about 65 saves each. Mitchell's goals against average is a bloated 5.50 while Sidoruk stands at 3.55. The goal tenders have combined to let in 19 goals on the season, 10 of those in the third period alone.

Minnesota State is led by senior centerman Rob White who has bagged seven goals and two assists in the early going. Linemate Tim Wolfe has four goals and four assists. Brian Nelson and Todd Kelzenberg have split time in goal for Minnesota State. Special teams have helped Minnesota State to a 5-0-0 start as they are six for 19 on the power play and killed off 25 of 26 power plays against them.

"It's not going to come easy," Rohlik said, "It's going to come down to hard work."

Next weekend, Nebraska-Omaha hosts the United States Military Academy in a two-game series. Last year, Army swept the Mavs in West Point, N.Y. and finished the season at 18-15-1.

And Down The Stretch They Come

by Andy Nordmeier
Sports Editor

The Maverick volleyball team is heading down the stretch run of its season and feeling the playoff push come on strong.

The stretch starts tonight as the Mavericks are down to just seven matches left in the regular season. Both of this weekend's games are in the Sapp Fieldhouse.

"In order for us to qualify, I feel we have to go 6-1," Maverick head coach Rose Shires said.

The Mavericks will have to do it against teams they have beaten before. They play North Dakota State and North Dakota this weekend before traveling to conference cellar-dwellers Morningside and South Dakota. The Mavs also have a game at Northern Colorado before closing the year out with a home series against St. Cloud State and Minnesota State-Mankato.

The Mavs have beaten every one of those opponents this year with the exception of North Dakota State.

The team is currently 16-9 overall and 6-5 in the North Central Conference and ranked No. 18 in the latest AVCA Division II Coaches Poll.

The Mavericks have a tough opponent tonight at 7 p.m. in the No. 6

North Dakota State Bison that are 23-3 overall and second in the conference at 11-2.

North Dakota State had won 11 straight matches before losing to conference-leading Augustana in three games last weekend. They have a strong, balanced offense featuring five players with more than 150 kills on the season. That group is led by middle blocker Carrie Jacobson who has recorded 287 kills and 137 blocks this season. Middle blocker Jamie Lene is second with 269 kills on the year.

"North Dakota State will want to redeem themselves," Shires said, "A win against them would be a significant win for us. It would definitely help us to secure a space at the playoffs."

The Mavericks also host North Dakota (5-17 overall, 2-11 in conference) tomorrow night at 6 p.m.

North Dakota has lost six in a row in conference and is eighth in the 10-team conference. Senior Angela Hoffman's 252 kills and setter Katie Larson's 678 assists are the two key players on the team. Despite their record, North Dakota can still put up a fight and the Mavericks can't take them lightly.

The team is healthy this week as freshman Nikki Mastny has recovered from a pulled abdominal muscle and the rest of the team is at full strength.

After this weekend's action, the Mavs hit the road for the matches against South Dakota next Friday, Morningside on Nov. 7 and Northern Colorado on Tuesday Nov. 10.

Mav Swimmers Make Splash in Season Opener

by Andy Nordmeier
Sports Editor

The Maverick swimming and diving team opened its second season with a 180-100 win over the South Dakota State Jackrabbits last Saturday in Brookings, S.D.

The Mavericks won 10 events on the day including three wins from Tasha Soby and a sweep of the diving events by Aja Wurth.

"This meet let us all know where we stand and what we need to focus on for following meets," freshman Jodie Haferbier said, "Everyone put in a great effort and it showed."

One of the day's highlights was Soby's win in the 100-yard backstroke in a school-record time of 1:03.09. That was one of her three wins on the day.

Despite the win, the team is still pushing for more success.

"It helped to get a win under our belts," sophomore Steph Patterson said, "The meet also helped us by pointing out what we need to work on in practice."

The team has been practicing all week for the tomorrow's meet against the University of Nebraska-Kearney Antelopes at Kearney, Neb. which starts at noon.

"Our girls are doing a fantastic job in practice," Samland said, "we have a stronger line-up but there's something to be desired."

Last year the Mavericks and the Antelopes swam a highly-contested dual meet with the Mavericks edging the Antelopes 103-101 here in Omaha.

"I think it (South Dakota State) was good we got competition," Head Coach Todd Samland said, "but it's going to be close again."

After the trip to Kearney, the team will head out on the road next week as well. They will travel west to Colorado for dual meets with the Colorado School of Mines in Golden, Colo. next Friday and conference rival Northern Colorado in Greeley, Colo. Nov. 7. That starts a stretch of the season where the team has eight competitions in five weeks.

UNO Cross Country Prepares to Qualify

by Andy Nordmeier
Sports Editor

The Maverick cross country team is preparing for the national qualifying meet on Nov. 7 in Aberdeen, S.D. and has a bye week this weekend to prepare.

"Everybody is going to have to run their best race," Maverick Head Coach Tim Hendricks said.

The meet takes the top four teams and qualifies them for nationals. Despite the injuries to Tara Biltoft, Becky Goltz and Theresa Sanderson the team still can make the national field.

"We're not too far out of fourth," Hendricks said.

The course for the national qualifier will be longer than most others the team has run on this season as it's a 6,000-meter course. The Mavericks, as well as half of the North Central Conference teams, have yet to run on a 6,000-meter course this season. The course is longer but there's no real advantage or disadvantage to that said Hendricks.

North Dakota State and Northern Colorado should make the nationals with South Dakota, North Dakota, Minnesota State and the Mavericks fighting for the final two spots. Watch for Minnesota-Duluth as a sleeper team.

The team also ran a non-scoring meet against South Dakota State and placed seven runners in the top 10, including a fourth place finish by Tara Biltoft who was running unattached (not with the team).

"Biltoft will not run at the regional," Hendricks said, "Tara could probably race, but it would be kind of silly to run her in one meet."

Theresa Sanderson has been slowed by a foot injury that kept out of practice for a week. X-rays came back negative on her foot, but she will probably get cortisone shots for the pain so she can run this weekend. There hasn't been a definite diagnosis yet, but everything from inflammation of the joints to arthritis has been said to cause her discomfort.

"Hopefully, the rest will do her foot good," Hendricks said, "She's been in the swim-x for most of the week."

These injuries are part of what has been a "frustrating year" for the team. Monday was the first day since the start of practice that everybody was at practice.

Injuries aside, the team still will have to run well to get the berth into the nationals.

"We're as ready as we're going to be," Hendricks said.

Wrestling Team on Top in Pre-Season

After a conference call involving the North Central Conference (NCC) wrestling coaches, the Maverick wrestling team is on top of the pre-season coaches' rankings.

The Mavericks have nine wrestlers ranked in the top four positions across the 10 weight classes, highlighted by three top-ranked wrestlers in national champion Braumon

Creighton (141 pounds), Scott Antoniak (184 pounds) and Jose Medina (197 pounds).

Teamwise, the Mavericks scored 68 points to lead the field. North Dakota State and South Dakota State tied for second with 36 points. Augustana and Minnesota State rounded out the top five.

Bartling Named NCC Award-Winner

The defensive unit of the Maverick football team was the key in beating Northern Colorado last weekend and the North Central Conference's Defensive Player of the Week, linebacker Jason Bartling, anchored it. Bartling led the team with 12 tackles and recovered the fumble that set up place-kicker Paul Kosel's game-winning field goal in the third quarter. Bartling is the first Maverick to win that award this season.

A Hockey Puck For Lunch

The Maverick hockey program's boosters, the Blue Line Club, is holding its second luncheon today at 11:30 a.m. at the Holiday Inn Central at 72nd and Grover Streets in Omaha. Tickets can be picked up at the door for $13 each. Contact Jim Semerad at 397-8600, extension 327 for more information.
